We've been in here for almost a year now. I haven't been able to see my Caucasian friends and other Chinese and Filipinos friends. Some of them are going to graduate this year. Some are still Japs. like I am. Having to attend another year. I wonder how they feel about us. One Chinese friend who had been a friend in deed still writes to me. One classmate of mine has passed away. There isn't much accidents here to kill people like outside world. I wonder what they could be doing now.

It is impossible for me to see some of my friends on account of this evacuation. They are settled in a different camp or out of state of California. One of them, Mary, is probably working in the office. She might be knitting or crocheting getting her hope chest filled. I haven't been able to see her for almost a whole year. She was two years my senior who was just like a sister to me. I wonder what she could be doing right now.

Gosh! How tall are you Masako?
Aren't you about 5ft. 8 or so? How did you grow so tall, eating spaghetti always? (That's some of the comments I hear about my tallness). I wish I knew how I grew so tall myself.
During my grammar school, I used to shy away to be in school activities, But now I'm making up for all that.

I was in more embarrassing situation on account of my height. There are some advantage and disadvantage of being tall isn't there?

Being 5ft. 5½ is rather tall, considering among us Japanese, but I'm sort of proud of it. Mother tells me (tallness) isn't anything to be ashamed of, because I'm not a freak, but just a normal girl.

When members of the Recreation Staff asked for donations for athletic equipment they did a wise thing. Each block is supposed to donate five dollars. This money is to be used for the buying of athletic equipment for the use of the people of this camp.

This stimulates competition. The kids and grownups all want to have fun and they form teams and leagues for all classes of people. This way all can have fun.

Sometimes when people tell you to do a thing, or when you are doing the right thing and someone tells you different, one has to bear it. But if you unload your feelings and take "it out" on another fellow you're feeling well. Many people do this. Now if some man of high authority was to be criticized like this he would be ashamed to face public. In other words let the man who has charge do as he thinks. Never condemn him.

I believe one of the important traits in developing a winning personality is "confidence" whenever I lack confidence, I kind of pull out of place in my environment. I feel as though I am a bit under confidence in doing, although other might think that I'm over confidence. It might be that I'm not doing my best, but I can't seem to improve my ability when I lack confidence. As an example, when I'm practicing or playing basketball, I have to have a good confidence in myself in order to improve my ability. In the same ^{way} I believe I should have a little confidence when doing things. The value & danger of confidence are well summed up in that ancient advice: "Be bold, Be bolder. Be not too bald."

As for my experiences with my conversations with others, I have noticed that you could win friends by being interested in them. As for the reaction of everyone else, I believe, is same as mine. An air of attentiveness when you're spoken to; — an attitude of interest in the opinions of others; — all these things seem to inspire interest in you.

One of the things which I dislike and which I think is a good way to lose a friend is by offering your advice, — unasked. Advising people is a way of stating that you're cleverer than they are.

Asking for advice is better than giving an unwanted advice since people are flattered by knowing that you consider their opinion important and they'll like you for it.

One of the "likes" about a friendship is loyalty. If you're a friend when your friend ship is needed, you'll never find your key lacking friends when the friendship of others is wanted.

One of the dislikes that goes with friendship is gossip. I believe that when you gossip about others you only mean to make a funny story about the way the other person do things. But it won't sound so funny to you when it gets back to you.

A good way to win friends is with a little sense of humor. Every one enjoys the company of the person who can laugh, find amusement in the serious business of living.

One thing I dislike about others is when they tell all of their troubles. Most people have a few little worries of their own and they don't want the burden of yours on their shoulders

Why does everything have to happen to me when I don't want it to happen? Tomorrow is a "Open House" and I have to sing with five other girls. Well, the same old thing - I caught a cold again. It reminded me of the day we, the "mixed chorus" sang on the concert, back in December. I had a cold then, and did I suffer when I went out before the audience. How could I sing when I had a cough drop in my mouth, and trying so hard to hold back my coughs? I am just hoping that this embarrassing thing won't happen to me tomorrow night, but believe me, my cold is just as bad.

This is a very personal story.
After hearing a discussion on the topic of "Should we go steady", lots of things came up to my mind.
Of course, I am not opposed to going steady because I am going steady, but I would like to stress that going steady, to me, is not anything like we discussed in the previous day. Some said it is like being engaged, or you miss out funs, and can not associate with other people and so forth.
This boy, with whom I am going steady, is just as friendly as any other boy in the community.
I enjoy being with him because he is interesting to associate with,
and is friendly. I don't miss out any funs because I have many other friends just like him, and even if we go to dances, we trade off, and I think I associate with many people just as well as those people who are not going steady. It is a funny thing, because it is not easy to take a choice for either going steady or not going steady to many of us. Those people going steady are talked as "waste time" and the not going steady is talked as "seen all around" or "welfare".

Today I had the most embarrassing moment in my life.

While I was working in the wood shop class I was making a box and somehow I nailed all sides making it impossible for me to open it.

Everybody was laughing at me. Well this will teach me to watch what I doing from now on.

Going steady! Since I'm preparing a few notes on this topic for today's class discussion I may as well write a few lines on what I think about it.

To begin with, I feel that there are more advantages of not going steady than to go steady. I guess I can say this because I, myself, was going steady for about 8 months straight and during all that time, I seemed to be losing my close friends so I took it upon myself to quit right then and there and waited for results. It was just as I had expected. My friends all got with me and we have so much fun together. I suppose they resented my going with this person for some particular reason. As far as character etc. goes, he was it, but something just didn't click with us.

First impression. I often wonder why people form their opinions about another person upon meeting them for the first time. I've heard so many boys and girls, especially girls, say, "I don't like her." I suppose girls have more of a tendency to draw their conclusions upon seeing a person once, because they are more "catty" than the boys, and I think that until you acquaint yourself with others, it is not fair to judge them at first sight. I believe that if everyone would stop and talk with others and really "let your hair down" so to speak, then there wouldn't be any of this, "I don't like her" upon meeting someone for the first time.

Posture and neatness reflects a great deal on a person's character. Good posture aids a person very much in doing good or at least average work in school and at work. On the other hand, if a person had a poor posture; shoulders slumped, walking with a "don't care drag," then, he will do his work in the same manner. Namely, sloppy and "don't care what grade I get" attitude.

Others with good posture are of the opposite type. They are the ones who want to strive toward a better grade each time, and they are the ones who make something of themselves and hold an honorable place in this world.

I have quite a number of pet peeves so I shall just mention one for this time. Namely — I detest people who constantly gossip about others — this is especially true in girls. I don't recall if I had expressed my opinion on this topic, but if I have, it won't matter if it's stressed again.

There are so many, shall I say, jealous people among the colonists that it's really war within ourselves here in camp. Because I have come in contact with so many of the above type, and know they're "two-faced," I try to avoid getting in contact with them. In order to save myself from doing the same, I find it is much wiser to stay away from such people.

Should a girl ask the boy for a date? No, positively no! I do not think it is ~~thorough~~ for the girl to ask, although many girls think so. Many girls think that a girl should and does ask a boy. I think this is very silly and unlady-like for the girl. If the girl does this too often, the boys all talk bad about this girl and all the boys will know what kind of girl she is.

I think — is a very nice person. She has a nice personality, dresses nice, and everything is just perfect about her.
I wish I or anyone

we'll all be perfect. But,
to this will not do as

Why is good health so important in your life? Good health is very important to make a success out of yourself. If you are in good health you can ^{not} enjoy life, do work or play well, look well, and be grouchy. These are just some of the reasons that good health is important. So, let us all take care of ourselves.

Cooperation is an essential thing in doing any thing. Take for example the case a group of girls were going to give a party at the last minute. They didn't have much to work with but the girls really got together and worked. The party was a success.

This is only one of many examples that cooperation is essential.
