

A SAMPLE OF INGENUITY

It has been noted elsewhere that the Swimming Pool acted as a storage tank for irrigation water and also that the Victory Huts were added to take care of an unexpected increase in our population.

A Japanese from Peru happened to be assigned to a Victory Hut, which was built over the irrigation pipe.

First, as many of the Japanese did he built a little porch around his house. Then he took a piece of sewer pipe, the bottom of a double boiler and a sauce pan and cemented them together connecting the sewer pipe with the irrigation pipe, then he stole a sink and drain, also a drain for his ice box and attached these to the irrigation pipe.

The privacy of the home was always respected and this gentleman got away with his ingenuity until after his repatriation to Japan, at which time he had torn down his porch to make boxes in which to pack his belongings for the trip.

