 coming at Homer and we took a ferry to Halibut Cove. Wood no sidewalks, its all board walks. The reason is that the whole (town?) is on an island and the majority of the buildings are built on stilts, now a central well, covered its an artist houses are built on islands in the cove

Whit N. The smallest Part or Particle imaginable, an iota

Singe

I have always been different, but I guess I never really noticed, I mean, I really like hats, and I like to dress nicely, but it's not like I like attention. In fact, I don't like any attention. ^{In fact} I smile at people & hope they leave me alone. I think that my hat-wearing, and my different clothes, I think that's just my style, as it were.
Another odd thing, I actually don't understand as I call them "Hip People" meaning just about every other kid my age, or older, I mean it's not like some times when I pretend I don't understand what you mean those times I'm just afraid that you will start asking questions I don't know the answer to. This, this, mis understanding, I suppose, probably stems from my rabid fear of becoming one of them, but that stops with people about 30, after that I can understand

But I also don't understand why they care. I mean, I get laughed at, or smiled at, or complimented. But I just get all flustered, I mean, I guess that's the word, embarrassed would work too. Dad says I'm eccentric, which is what I'm aiming for, I guess.
Dad says that when I smile at people, they only smile back because they think I'm crazy, which doesn't really bother me, I guess. After all, I'm eccentric.
I wonder, are there other people out there like me? People who love hats, old clothes, & random facts? That would be really quite nice, I've never met anyone quite like me, which is good, I guess, because everybody is different, if we were all the same, the world would be perfect. I wonder, if I did go back in time to about 1940, would I fit in then? No, I would not. I don't really need to fit, but, it would be nice. I am sure you understand.
Best Regards,
J.D. Earl
