Dependence. (in) Dependence in, Dep

I'm a very one tracked possess a person (Don't)

1 Still don't know why I like you but when we're apart
it's that same deadened emotional state that came when I left home & more often than it should.

1 Don't feel anything at all sometimes do the time so I can't tell if I love you or not or even care. I'm sorry

I want to love you the way I need you.
I want you to love me back but I don't want to hurt you when I leave.

1 Don't want to leave I want to feel un-lonely pressed against
you. It doesn't always work.
It should work.
Why doesn't it always work
why do I still feel dead inside even when you're in my arms?

1 (Like) you because I'm basically
sad & lonely. My basic element is loneliness. Yours (as near as I can tell) is like what's at the centre of a star. Pure, white hot energy firing out into the world.

1 Like you because I'm sad & lonely
& you make me feel less like that & it's fucking addicting but that's not really a basis for a healthy relationship & that scares me
so I don't mention it (ignore)

I'm trying not to be addicted to you but don't know what healthy relationships look like. Nobody breaks you on this

Cascadia Poetry Festival: Student Gathering

Thoughts so far on the festival?

What didn't you know, that you now know or better understand?

How has what you've heard/learned at the festival connected with the poetry (or other classes) you are taking?

Where are you from?

How and why does where you're from impact the way you see and represent the world?

What about being from Cascadia seems unique in terms of its poetry and what you've heard so far?

BASKET GARDEN

This garden seeks to provide basket-making materials for tribal artists who struggle to obtain enough plant material to keep traditional arts alive. We hope to serve the needs of local tribal artists as well as grow harvestable material used in traditional European basketmaking arts. Evergreen faculty and students use the garden to learn about basket making and traditional ecological knowledge.

DEER GARDEN

A collection of deer-resistant plants coming in 2007.

LAURASIAN LANDSCAPE

This garden demonstrates that kinship exists among plants (and thus people) from the North American and Eurasian continents. It creates the opportunity to learn about relations between different people and closely related plants. With related plants from North America and Eurasia this garden also creates a means to learn about how continental drift and land bridges influenced plant speciation.

LONGHOUSE ETHNOBOTANICAL GARDEN

Faculty member Marja Eloheimo collaborated with students, tribal members, and campus facilities to prepare this site and install approximately 100 species representing various habitat areas. The garden was named "s'ulex" by Upper Skagit elder Vi Hilbert. This word refers to gathering and creating possibilities from what nature offers.

MEDICINAL HERB GARDEN

Students installed this European ethnobotanical garden on the campus Organic Farm with a four-square design that mimics a Persian-inspired garden layout common during the Renaissance. A traditional yew hedge encloses the paths and parterres (geometric planting beds). The herbs are labeled according to the humoral system which was central to medieval and Renaissance healing practices in Europe.

NATIVE PLANT DEMONSTRATION GARDENS

Numerous areas around the Seminar II building and a small area on Red Square demonstrate the usefulness of native plants for horticulture. Using native plants reduces use of water, pesticides, and fertilizers. They also rarely become weedy.

POST-GLACIAL FOREST

The Post-Glacial Forest is a recreation of the vegetation that occurred in the region as the Vashon glacier receded from its terminus south of Olympia. The plant palette is based on pollen core samples taken from wetlands in the Puget Sound area. The late glacial period samples from which the plant palette was primarily derived range in age from 8,000 to 14,000 years old.

PRAIRIE ROOF GARDEN

The Prairie Roof Garden, located atop the library building, consists of indigenous food plants and native medicine plants from local prairies. Prairies in the South Puget Sound provide evidence for a complex and positive relationship between indigenous peoples and plants. These cultural landscapes provide habitat for many rare and endangered species that depend on these human manipulated habitats.

PRIMITIVE PLANT GARDEN

This garden creates an opportunity for people to learn about the evolution of various groups of plants, from spore bearing species, such as ferns, that appear early in the fossil records to the more recently evolved flowering plants.

RAIN ROOF GARDENS

The Roof Gardens located atop the Seminar II building were established to reduce the impact of the building by mitigating the increase in impervious surfaces created by the new construction. Rainwater captured by the new gardens and not used by the plants drains to the ground near the building where it then recharges the groundwater on site. The gardens also reduce energy use by insulating the roof.

WATERWISE POLLINATOR GARDEN

The garden here has been planted with species that attract butterflies, hummingbirds, and bees. Its purpose is to educate about the excessive use of pesticides in backyard gardens and how they impact pollinators as well as to point out the significance of reduced pollination rates. The plants in this garden are also drought tolerant, needing little supplemental irrigation during the dry months of late summer.

Until recently, landscaping around buildings at The Evergreen State College functioned merely as green fringe with no educational value. Efforts are underway to transform these spaces into teaching gardens and venues for public art. Students designed and installed many of the gardens. Students also designed interpretive panels for these various gardens using their original artwork as illustrations.

In the future we hope to collaborate with artists in residence working with students to create public art in natural settings that evokes a sense of place. Come learn about these exciting new outdoor learning opportunities and efforts to create a sustainable eco-culture at The Evergreen State College.

For more information visit our website:
www.evergreen.edu/teachinggardens

We hope to create additional gardens in the future, including a deer garden that showcases plants less likely to be browsed by deer. Plans for a labyrinth and bamboo gardens are also in the works, as well as a memorial, inspirational garden.

FUTURE PLANS

Thanks to Katie Day for the graphic layout and to Kris Miller for the photograph of his handmade basket. All other photographs were taken by Frederica Bowcutt and Katie Day. A special thanks to all the students, too numerous to list, who have invested their creative energy and sweat into making the gardens a reality. You know who you are.

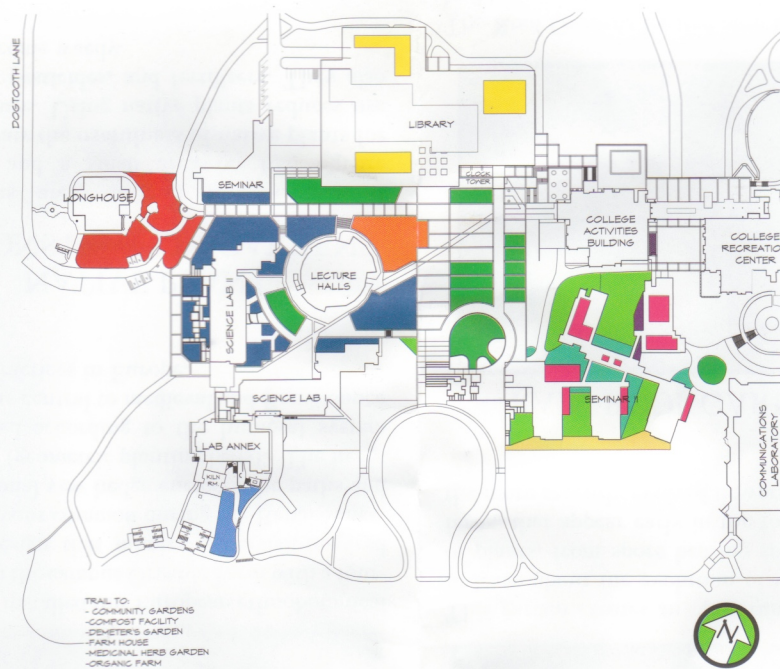

The teaching gardens have been made possible in part by the generous contributions of the following institutions: The City of Olympia, Sound Native Plants, Washington Department of Transportation, and the Washington State University Cooperative Extension Native Plant Salvage Project.

SPECIAL THANKS

- Create opportunities for students to link theory with praxis
- Improve aesthetics in the core of the campus
- Link to our forest trail system
- Reduce water and energy usage
- Improve wildlife habitat
- Create low maintenance designs
- Promote environmentally sustainable garden design
- Foster social justice
- Celebrate cultural diversity on campus
- Improve the educational value of plantings
